173 Ferris Hill Road, New Canaan, Conn.
 $4,995,000

Architect: Louise Brooks
 Rachel Walsh, William Pitt Sotheby's International, 203-912-5908

This New Canaan Colonial style home was designed by Louise Brooks in 2000 and features a long tree-lined driveway leading up to a stone fronted residence with a courtyard. The house was built to take advantage of light from all directions, particularly from the rear of the home, which overlooks an infinity edge pool and spa, and the 21-acre nature preserve. A rear gallery hall stretches from the living room to the family room and houses the stairwell. The architect designed the home so that the stairwell would not be an obvious feature upon entering the front door, but rather a front-to-back view, flanked on the left by the wood paneled library and on the right by the dining room, greets visitors. The gallery hall also features three sets of French doors which open to a covered porch area that attaches to a terrace. Off of the kitchen/family great room, there is another terrace with a man-made waterfall.

The kitchen features Carrera marble counter tops and custom built-ins, a breakfast table nook and family room fireplace, which can be enjoyed from the kitchen. The home's second floor hallways serve more as rooms, with one area used for reading. A grand staircases creates a visual effect from the top to the bottom floor. The master bedroom comprises a sitting room or woman's office and a large marble bathroom with a over-sized walk-in closet with a makeup table.
