

Hello Earthlings, welcome to this strange Connecticut

BUYING

LUXURY

A view of the outside of a condo complex shaped liked a space ship in Connecticut.

PlanOmatic

By Megan Turchi @meganturchi

Boston.com Staff

June 10, 2015 1:54 PM

In the 1980s, two developers in the town of Guilford, Connecticut asked architect Wilfred Arm according to the New Haven Register .

The New York Times reported:

“His response was this copper-clad structure, which was raised up on concrete stalks to north. Its units were loftlike, about 1,400 square feet, with open living areas and a two-ca But many of the town’s residents were horrified.”

The outside of the structure is made out of copper.

PlanOmatic

Armster's wild idea left him with a lot of unhappy people in the town and even a death threat,

According to the Register, people wanted the structure to fit in with their idyllic, colonial town. Now, one of the complex's 13 units is for sale.

The condos have lots of natural light streaming in.

PlanOmatic

446 Whitfield Street #F is a one-bedroom, two-bathroom, 1448-square-foot condo for sale for

But you won't have to brave your neighbors' wrath to move in.

Barbara Carney, the condo's realtor from Sotheby's International Realty, said the building has

"All you have to do is say spaceship and they know what you are talking about," she said.

The condo also has a view of the water.

PlanOmatic

She also said some people drive through the parking lot just to see the building.

“It has been embraced,” Carney said.

And the people who live in the building love it.

Carney said there has been very little turnover, as there are many original owners still living th

“It’s a block from the harbor and has sound views from the east and the west end,” she said. “ issues.”

Related Article

Hello Earthlings, welcome to this strange Connecticut condo for sale

Ren

Mass. Among States With the Most $1M Homes

Kath